e. School Start Times
Mr. Myers stated that Nurture Shock and Backgrounder: Later Start Times (web page) was a great introduction to later school start times, as it identifies the problem and the consequences that arise from not correcting the problem. He stated that this is not a matter of teenagers sleeping late but there is a biological reason. Melatonin does not affect a teenagers’ brain until 11:00pm or later and the brain does not chemically wake up until later in the morning. We expect these students to come to school at 7:40 am ready to focus and engage in their first course and that is not chemically possible for kids. Each study reinforces that this is not a choice for kids and that chemically their brains do not wake up until 8:00am. Mr. Myers stated that a lack of a full night’ sleep will affect student choices, driving to school in the morning, (half of all accidents in the morning are from teenagers), and social skills. Mr. Myers stated that Westboro Public Schools has a plan on how they changed their start times. A discussion took place regarding changing school start times. It was stated that the biggest push back will be regarding sports and younger students waiting at bus stops in the dark. Ryan Kurkiewicz, Student Council Representative, has begun devising a survey for students. Mr. Myers stated that if we craft a survey it should be around what obstacles would be encountered if we change the school start times, not should we change the start times. It was stated that child care could be a concern if the older students get home after the younger children. Mr. Myers stated that aftercare could be a solution. Mr. Bedard stated that there is some extra time built into the transportation routes between the high school and Shaw School. Mr. Myer stated that there is a profession from Brown University that comes to public forums to answer questions regarding later school start times. Mr. Nietupski asked School Councils could be given the research to investigate later school start times. She stated that she would like to get the council members involved on the task force. Mrs. Nietupski also suggested that a survey be created to send to families. Ms. Ryan suggested that surveys be handed out to parents during parent’s nights at Shaw and Elmwood.
